

CIA Director Speaks To Woman's Club

The Central Intelligence Agency Director, Mr. William Colby talked to Arlington's Williamsburg Club of the new roles within the C.I.A. He remarked on the average American's view of the work of an agent as being a combination of "Nathan Hale," "I Spy," and perhaps a little of "Maxwell Smart," thrown in. Since we are all human, a case can be made for these likenesses on rare occasions but fundamentally this image is untrue today, he said.

Today the agency is geared to new technology with electronic devices that can count the missile capacity of a foreign power so that peace agreements can go forward with the knowledge of the capability of the other government. We have new forms of audio and photographic equipment for surveillance such as was used to give us information about the Cuban missiles, Colby submitted.

The real function of the C.I.A. is to discover and avert problems before they have a good start, according to the director. Information gathering is a necessary part of government and "all governments do it," he said.

Colby also spoke of the changes within the Agency with women taking a much larger role and rising through the ranks to more important jobs. He thinks there is no better place for a man or woman to begin a career than the C.I.A. There are many types of jobs there for young people interested in research, technology, foreign service and management.

Colby frankly admitted there had been errors recently in incorrect surveillance of American citizens which, he said is no longer being done. There will be a closer scrutiny by Congress and the constitution and judicial laws will be strictly upheld, he promised.

He explained the need for a certain amount of secrecy to protect lives but the "stamp" has been taken off of many things including the whereabouts of the Agency itself.

Colby answered questions most cordially and was thanked by our president, Mrs. Hugh Gilmore.

Our board and members enthusiastically welcomed six new members to the club, Mrs. David Clayton, Mrs. Paul Jamarik, Mrs. Charles Hall, Mrs. Burdell Springer and Mrs. Robert Sayer.

LEBANON, N.H.
VALLEY NEWS

E - 9,635

APR 30 1975

CLA Director Speaks To Woman's Club

The Central Intelligence Agency Director, Mr. William Colby talked to Arlington's Williamsburg Club of the new roles within the C.I.A. He remarked on the average American's view of the work of an agent as being a combination of "Nathan Hale," "ISpy," and perhaps a little of "Maxwell Smart," thrown in. Since we are all human, a case can be made for these likenesses on rare occasions but fundamentally this image is untrue today, he said.

Today the agency is geared to new technology with electronic devices that can count the missile capacity of a foreign power so that peace agreements can go forward with the knowledge of the capability of the other government. We have new forms of audio and photographic equipment for surveillance such as was used to give us information about the Cuban missiles, Colby submitted.

The real function of the C.I.A. is to discover and avert problems before they have a good start, according to the director. Information gathering is a necessary part of government and "all governments do it," he said.

Colby also spoke of the changes within the Agency with women taking a much larger role and rising through the ranks to more important jobs. He thinks there is no better place for a man or woman to begin a career than the C.I.A. There are many types of jobs there for young people interested in research, technology, foreign service and management.

Colby frankly admitted there had been errors recently in incorrect surveillance of American citizens which, he said is no longer being done. There will be a closer scrutiny by Congress and the constitution and judicial laws will be strictly upheld, he promised.

He explained the need for a certain amount of secrecy to protect lives but the "stamp" has been taken off of many things including the whereabouts of the Agency itself.

Colby answered questions most cordially and was thanked by our president, Mrs. Hugh Gilmore.

Our board and members enthusiastically welcomed six new members to the club, Mrs. David Clayton, Mrs. Paul Jamarik, Mrs. Charles Hall, Mrs. Burdell Springer and Mrs. Robert Sayer.